

Not only does the fossil record prove that macro evolution did not happen in the past, macro evolution is not happening today. The lack of partially developed organs and functions in all living creatures proves this.

Evolution cannot make large jumps. To do that would require a super great miracle of miracles. And sexual reproduction will end all such events anyhow. But if evolution is gradual, there should also be partially developed organs, functions, etc. in all individual creatures alive today and that have ever lived. There are not. Why?

The odds against all the missing partially developed organs and functions in in all individual creatures alive today and that have ever lived is vast. The odds against are at least  $10^{10}$  (10 billion, billion, billion) to 1.

Now combine the fact that macro evolution is not happening today with the fact that the fossil record proves it never happened in the past, and the following can be stated. The species today in the world are not making jumps in evolution and are not descended from other species. Like kind produces like kind just as the Bible says. So macro evolution never happened. So almost all those creatures that have been fossilized are just the result of the worldwide flood. The same thing would happen if there were a worldwide flood today. But since there is no macro evolution in the fossil record, it collapses the time that the sedimentary rock layers that contain fossils were laid down to only about a year. But then that means that the earth's surface is only thousands of years old. That also disproves the false science of uniformitarianism and proves the science of catastrophism true. But that proves that all dating techniques, that give an old age for anything on the earth, are incorrect. That also proves that the earth and the moon are only thousands of years old. But that proves that all dating techniques, that give an old age to anything in the solar system, are incorrect. But then that disproves the long age dating of the universe and refutes the Big Bang. Evolution and billions of years are like a house of cards, pull out one and it all collapses.
